Chapter 01: The Grass Mat

Twelve Chapter 1 page-scenes are live on the board.

Page 01 - Childhood sunlight

Before the world learns how to take, morning still knows how to give. A small hand reaches into sound, and the house holds its breath around love.

Page 04 - Zeth waking on the grass mat

Some mornings do not wake you; they return you. Under the thin green weave, tomorrow waits with its shoes already on.

Page 05 - KB and the Polo keys

Friendship arrives jangling in one hand, laughing before the fear can stand up. The road is not mercy, but it offers a way out.

Page 06 - The business started outside

Every empire begins somewhere ordinary: a yard, a joke, two boys refusing to stay small. The gate remembers who dreamed aloud first.

Page 07 - Thobile at the fence

A fence can hold a whole history if both sides pretend not to look. Her voice finds the crack where memory keeps breathing.

Page 08 - Don't let them make you boring

The warning smiles because it knows him too well. To stay alive is one thing; to stay awake is another.

Page 09 - Gogo's room

Some rooms are built from prayer and old fabric. Here, truth does not shout; it waits until he sits down.

Page 10 - Your mother would be proud

Pride arrives with a bruise inside it. The words land softly, and still they open the wound by name.

Page 11 - Zeth leaving Soweto

The place lets him go without releasing him. Behind the car, the morning folds itself into a memory he will keep meeting.

Page 12 - Maboneng apartment

The city shines like a new password. In the small blue glow of the phone, the future lights up, and behind it the past starts moving.
